The aid and development sector's security risk management is subject to the same basic legal ground rules and responsibilities as any other enterprise. As for any employer, these are mandatory, not optional. It is not only an operational issue; it is a governance issue.

This has implications for NGO access, programming and security risk management. SMI has worked with lawyers and non-profit organizations in several countries to develop a common baseline and process for analysis to be applied by international organizations seeking to meet their legal obligations in looking after their staff.

Join us to explore the implications of Duty of Care for the international NGO sector.
